Okay, time for you to take immediate action. Either get your car keys or grab that keyboard, because the latest Ken Haedrich cookbook has just been published. The Harvest Baker is the latest in the line of absolutely perfect cookbooks written by Ken. You may have Pie or Apple Pie or Comfort Food or the Maple Syrup Cookbook already in your kitchen. YouÃ¢Â Â™ll want to add this one. ThereÃ¢Â Â™s more variety here than youÃ¢Â Â™ve seen in KenÃ¢Â Â™s books before. Over 150 recipes include both sweet and savory delights. There are four parts to the book, each with its own set of chapters. Part 1, For the Love of Bread, begins with a chapter on morning breads, then expands to sweet and savory quick breads and concludes with yeast breads and rolls and buns. If you want bread, sweet or savory at some point in the day, then here are some of the ideas: Whole Wheat Blueberry Beet Muffins Sweet Potato Buttermilk Biscuits Roasted Carrot Tea Loaf Apple Applesauce Oatmeal Bread Roasted Bell Pepper Buttermilk Cornbread Mushroom, Spinach and Blue-Cheese Stuffed Baguette Remember, that was just Part One. Part 2, Crusty Entrees, continues the extravaganza with first a chapter for pizzas, flatbreads, calzones and other stuffed breads. Then comes the chapter for savory harvest pies, like quiches and pot pies. Ideas here include: White Bean, Spinach and Bacon Pizza Tomato Jam Pizza with Caramelized Onions Cabbage and Sausage Stuffed Buns Creamy Buffalo Chicken, Tomato, and Corn Pie Green Pea and Parmesan Cheese Tartlets CrÃ™me Fraiche Corn Quiche In Part 3, The BakerÃ¢Â Â™s Sweet Tooth, we finally depart from those darn vegetables and get to the sweet heart of KenÃ¢Â Â™s recipes. IÃ¢Â Â™m not opposed to a pot pie, not me, but the chapters float dreams of cookies and bar, cakes both pound and coffee, and, but of course, pies. Pies. Ken is, after all, the founder of The Pie Academy. What awaits you. Oh, just darlings like: Chocolate Sandwich Cookies with Sweet Herb Mascarpone Ricotta Pound Cake with Pears, Walnuts and Sage Peach Pecan Shortcake Honey Parsnip Cake with Maple Cream Cheese Frosting Sweet Carrot Pie Peach Apricot Crumb Crostata To top the book off, there is Part 4, called surprisingly Top It Off, with recipes for sauces, glazes, streusel, and more. You might be exhausted by the time you get here, but there are recipes for:Food Processor Tomato JamBrown Sugar StreuselHome Made CrÃ“me FraicheOrdinarily, I go through a new cookbook and scan in the recipes I want to try. I might find a book to have 10 or up to 20 ideas that intrigue me, things that hopefully some day I can make. I didnÃ¢Â™t even try to decide with this book. My wife and I are beginning in Part 1, Chapter 1, and marching through this book. WeÃ¢Â™ll make everything. Every single one of the 150. Okay, maybe just a 100 or 105. But surely most of them.And so will you. This is KenÃ¢Â™s most extravagant and delightful book ever. And, thereÃ¢Â™s a side benefit. Ken is an author you can trust. Just follow his recipe and youÃ¢Â™ll be totally successful. Suzi and I have made dozens of his recipes. Every single one has turned out perfectly. These recipes have been tested and masterfully put into this book of baking treasures.Your keys or your keyboard. But today. Today.

The Harvest Baker: Sweet and Savory Baked Goods Made with Fresh Vegetables and Herbs by Ken Haedrich is a free NetGalley ebook that I read in late December. It's not too in-depth on the science of baking beyond equipment, measurements, simple directions, and tips, but, boy howdy, is it good. Each of Haedrich recipes contain some form of fruit, veg, or herb and are quick breads, normal-speed risen breads, picnic loaves and flatbread, rustic pies and tarts, cookies, and bars, cakes, sweet pies, and toppings/crumbs/sauces. A small handful of my favorite recipes are herbed cottage cheese loaf, a pizza with pureed broccoli cheese sauce, collard green and sausage pie with sesame crust, and mint Oreo cheesecake.

Most nutritionists and the federal government folks have been telling us we need to eat more fruits and vegetables. I do like to eat both fruits and vegetables but I do get bored with the same old thing. I was pleased to see how the author, Ken Haedrich, managed to incorporate produce in so many creative ways. The Harvest Baker: Sweet and Savory Baked Goods Made with Fresh Vegetables and Herbs was written for bakers who want to include more wholesome foods in their diet.The author starts his book with a section called Tool Talk where he discusses what to buy when it comes to stocking the kitchen with baking equipment. .I couldn't wait to get this book! So exciting to finally look through it! It was everything I hoped it would be from what I read. I was surprised to learn one could bake bread in flower pots- am so going to try that this fall. And for home gardeners who have waaay more tomatoes then they know what to do with- lots of recipes for them here. I know I grow tons of them and look forward to trying these recipes out in August. Home gardeners, and those who enjoy farmers markets, will find lots of tasty recipes for everything from apples to zucchinis. Happy baking!

Another big hit out of the ball park on this one, Ken. The savory pies are my favorites. Love all the tool tips in the front and of course the many hints you share within the pages to save time and frustration like how to peel a tomato. Also, the cover makes it very easy to sit on the counter without having to always to prop it open. Thanks again for your humor and wisdom within the Harvest Baker.

Sat down and read it cover to cover when it arrived. So many wonderfully enticing recipes, I don't know where to start! I'll have hours and hours of fun and yummy results as I work my way through this one. The cover is soft but made of sturdy material with extra wide fold-in flaps that double as bookmarks and to hold the book open on the page you want when in use. Great idea! Very much worth the modest price.

Great variety of recipes! I liked the book so much I ordered Ken Haedrich's Soup Makes the Meal and The Old Farmer's Almanac Comfort Food.

Am giving this to my granddaughter....
