A tender and entertaining romance by award winning & New York Times bestselling author Linda Howard. Not only does she write fantastic romantic suspenses, but also riveting and exciting love stories as well such as this one. From beginning to end this heartwarming romance was impossible to put down to the shocking conclusion. It's a must read!.....For years, Sarah Harper was keeping a well hidden secret, and all this time, that same nagging question plagued her mind persistently while her heart was breaking into splinters each and every day. But how could she ever tell her best friend Diane that she's been deeply in love with her husband forever even before her friend even met him? Since the tragic death of his wife and children, Rome Matthews was about to give up on life after losing everything he loved most in the world, but if it wasn't for the one woman who stood by his side throughout the entire ordeal, he knew without a doubt, he would be a lost man. Realizing they were both still grieving over the loss of his wife and two small sons, Sarah was determined more than ever to help Rome through his grief, but when he comes to her suggesting a shocking plea, Sarah's not only speechless with his ludicrous idea, but she finds herself accepting his outrageous plan. Was such a thing even possible? Could she have been such a fool all these years to even think Rome could ever love her, especially since all his love was buried deep inside three graves and nothing left in his heart not even for her? Knowing full well she could never reveal her secret to Rome, but not even Sarah could foresee her future when Rome hid his own secrets close to his heart shocking Sarah to the bone, and before she knew it, she found herself seeking solace in Rome's loving arms. When sparks begin to ignite between the two, old hurts, unnerving insecurities, and painful memories resurface, but nothing will prepare Rome when Sarah reveals shocking news knocking him flat on his back, and forcing him of making the most difficult decision of his life. Will love find a way to heal two tortured hearts that were clearly meant to be together forever? .....

.....thank you..

My all-time favourite Linda Howard book. I first read Sarah's Child decades before. It broke my heart then and has every subsequent time I've read it. Rome and Sarah. Great couple. And heartbreaking. I felt so bad that Sarah had loved him before, during and after his marriage. And how heartbreaking for Rome to lose his wife and sons the way he did. And it was completely understandable to me why he refused to let himself love or care that deeply again for anyone else. But when the baby came...my heart ached for Rome, for Sarah, for their child. It was just absolutely heart wrenching.

I have 2 copies of this book in paperback and now on my kindle. I absolutely love Linda Howard's books.. next I'm going to read Sarah's Child's sequel, Almost Forever. There is a 3rd book to this little series. I 'think' the name is: " Bluebird Christmas ". It's about Derek Taliferro. Very short book, if you can buy it does complete the story. However, if anyone can let me know if has it as a Kindle huh book I'll be grateful. I think that you'll love the story of Rome and Sarah Matthews. There are a lot of ups and downs for this couple, but I will not tell you the ending. You need to read for yourself! Enjoy.

A great summer romance read. A different plot for a change not the same old romance story. I did not like the H at first and felt sorry for Sarah . Things did turn around only because of Sarah's love and patience.

Diane and Sarah had been best of friends all the way through school. Sarah Harper and Rome Matthews worked for the same company. She was secretly in love with Rome before Diane and Rome met. Sarah invited Diane to a company picnic, but she didn't expect Rome to take one look at Diane's beauty and fall in love with her. Five months later they were married. Then, they had two beautiful children. Sarah remained as close to Diane as before, but was careful not to be around when Rome was home. She worked in the same department as Rome. Then, she transferred to a different department so she wouldn't see him as often. Rome was promoted to vice-president. He traveled a great deal, which went along with his promotion. When Rome wasn't around, Sarah would visit Diane and her two sons. She never told Diane how she felt about Rome. Diane was her best friend and there wasn't any point to telling her. Diane was on the freeway driving the boys to school when a drunk driver crossed lanes and hit them with full force. The crash killed both boys instantly and days later Diane died. Two-years later, Rome called Sarah he was selling his house. He had found a box of memoirs that Diane had kept since high school, of things that Sarah and her had done together. Its been months since Rome last talked to Sarah, other than a "good Morning." Sarah was astonished that Rome called. They went out a few times to dinner. Rome was physically attracted to Sarah. He finally got the nerve and asked Sarah to marry him. It was more a marriage of convenience. Rome offered Sarah companionship instead of love. He did not want a family. After losing his two sons, he couldn't bear to be around children. Sarah agreed to his terms and married Rome. Sarah had given her heart to a man burdened by his past. Sarah told Rome she was pregnant. He went ballistic, and told Sarah to have an abortion. Sarah told him that she loved him and would do anything for him, except that. Rome loved Sarah, but her pregnancy was more than he ever expected. Rome had thought himself incapable of loving another woman after Diane and for him, loving Sarah was a miracle. But, he couldn't handle having another child. Sarah gave Rome an ultimatum. He could decide to go or stay, but she was going to keep the baby. Throughout the book, Sarah was strong-willed, so standing up to Rome was in keeping with her character. In her own quiet and reserved way, Sarah didn't fight toe-to-toe or argue with Rome, she did, however, refuse to give ground. The ending was heartbreaking and touching when Rome's second miracle occurred. It was sad and one couldn't help but cry with Rome. Sarah's love for Rome taught him how to love again. I recommend Sarah's Child by Linda Howard Really nice love story...

I read this a long time ago. I wonder really enjoyed this book. I hope if we will be interacting with more these characters.

Not my favorite of this author but still good enough to buy a convenient digital copy to go with my paperback copy.
