I think the strength of this book is the categories of prayers (Purity, Wisdom, etc.). For the most part, I will pray them over my daughter at bedtime though there have been a few times I've altered the prayer on the fly to better fit the theology we're trying to impart to her, especially at an early age (she's currently 4). Case in point, the other night I was reading a Prayer for My Daughter's Protection (or something to that effect; I don't have the book here with me) and I paused at one point because the prayer in the book petitioned the Lord to not allow harm to come to her. I don't want to impart a theology of avoidance of suffering to my daughter, but rather a theology of embracing suffering that glorifies God and purifies us for His glory and our good so I altered it just slightly to that end. Not a deal breaker (and probably not a deal at all for most people), but we're trying very early to give both our kids a big view of God and a biblical understanding of things like suffering (e.g., has God not answered this prayer for the majority of Christians around the world currently being persecuted, tortured and killed for their faith? Hardly.) In short, I appreciate the categories used in the book to get me thinking, as a parent, of how to pray for my kids and what things to have "on my radar" as they continue to grow. I would definitely recommend it to friends and family!

Precious sweet book. bought for new Great Grand babies. Can't wait to hear them quote from this book.

This book is good because I use it for our nightly devotionals with our 4-yr. old daughter Rosy Love. She loves the paintings inside of the little girls, which are beautiful artwork. These are prayers I speak out loudly as she looks at the beautiful paintings inside the book that fill an entire page, while the prayers with the Word of God in them are on the opposite page, so this is neat. I love Stormie, because she loves the absolute freeing truth of God and I knew this book would be good for my little girl whom we adore. It is a powerful way to speak God's truth and power into your little girl's life. Hannah Nowlin.
