Customer Reviews

So far the recipes are not as clear or omitting info and the book is rather small.

I'm not sure why people are giving this book a good review. First of all, the title advertises "instant pot & slow cooker recipes," however, many of the recipes require you to sautee and roast. I realize that's not a big deal but I purposely purchased this for slow cooker recipes. Also, there are zero pictures so it's hard to get motivated to cook the recipes. ALSO, there are TYPOS. I'm not sure how a published book has obvious typos and formatting issues. Save your money.

If you are buying a book called "The Ketogenic Vegan Diet," you'd probably expect, at a bare minimum, that the recipes be both ketogenic and vegan. Unfortunately it strikes on out both these things. On the vegan metric, it has recipes which include honey, and the "shopping list" in the back advises you to buy chicken broth. Now it is not that big of a deal to substitute agave nectar and vegetable broth respectively, but this indicates a general lack of concern or attention to detail. Did the author not know that bees and chickens are animals? Was the list cut-and-pasted from another book? Neither are a great sign. Neither are the recipes ketogenic. There are a couple of different definitions of exactly what a ketogenic diet is (google them if you like), but they all revolve around having low carbs. Medical ketogenic diets (like the kind used to control epilepsy) are typically less than 15g/day of carbs. Casual ketogenic diets (the kind laypeople use for health or weight loss) are typically less than 50g/day of carbs. I randomly picked two meal plans (breakfast, lunch, snack, dinner; 1 serving of each) and used the provided nutritional info. Meal #1: 54g carbs, 81g fat, 42g protein, 1230 calories. That is over the standard carb level for ketogenic diets, and worse, the calories are starvation level. If you adjust the serving sizes so the calories are close to the standard 2000/day, the macro numbers are 88g carbs, 132g fat, 68g protein. Clearly way too many carbs. Meal #2: 32g carbs, 57g fat, 30g protein, 878 calories. Even worse from a starvation diet standpoint. Adjusting to 2000 calories/day gives 73g carbs, 130g fat, 68g protein. Clearly over the limit for carbs. The only thing I can say is that the book was cheap, so I only feel a little ripped off. Recommendation: avoid.

This cheaply produced cookbook is completely uninspiring. Looking through it, I find almost nothing I'd be interested to try. And it's definitely not a great source to learn about ketogenic eating. Not a keeper.

What I love about this is that it combines ketogenic and vegan making it healthier for my diet. It also stated brief overview on what to expect about ketogenic.

Based on the title of the book, I thought this would be full of Instant Pot recipes. It is not. It contains 31 recipes. 5 of those are Instant Pot recipes and 2 or 3 of those 5 use the slow cook function on the IP. Anyone who is a little OCD with grammar should completely avoid this book, as just about every page contains numerous errors. Overall there are a few good recipes/ideas, but a second pair of eyes would have been good to edit as well as incorporate additional IP recipes.

Some of the recipes include honey. Honey is not vegan, and isn't particularly keto friendly. All in all I was disappointed with this book. No particularly innovative recipes. And the copy editing is sloppy.

In today's modern society, everyone of us are into eating healthy and look healthy. This book provides the right approach to keto-vegan lifestyle. The recipes are well researched and delicious. I am feeling confident every time I ate every recipes. Eva has an innovative way of looking at food in a different and healthy way without taking away from the flavors. I can't wait to see what she conjures up next
